

LORADO TAFT MIDWAY STUDIOS

6016 South Ingleside Avenue, Chicago

This group of brick buildings contains a labyrinth of studios created by Lorado Taft, one of the country's most accomplished sculptors. Known for his realistic works in monumental scale, Taft maintained a studio here from 1906 to 1929, adding other facilities for his close-knit group of assistants and students. The Midway Studios appear much as they did in Taft's time and continue in use as an art facility of the University of Chicago.
